Direct Mentions

Print Mentions

An opinion piece about Lord Darzi's decision to step down from his post as a minister, in The Guardian, notes that 'even doctors' leaders at the General Medical Council accept the need for greater openness as promoted by Darzi.'

The Guardian's Ins and Outs column notes the appointment of Niall Dickson to the position of Chief Executive for the GMC.

HSJ (online) features news of Paul Philip's secondment to the General Social Care Council.

The Lancashire Evening Post, which covered Dr Jonathan Chahal's fitness to practise hearing, reports that the doctor is now working at the Royal Preston Hospital.

The Journal reports that Dr Shankar Kashyap has applied for a Judicial Review into a GMC determination that his fitness to practise is impaired.

The News (Portsmouth) continues to cover Dr Jane Barton's fitness to practise hearing.

A letter in the Leicester Mercury from Ian Rogers' wife Sue explains their involvement in Mr Murty's fitness to practise case: <http://www.thisisleicestershire.co.uk/letters/seven-year-ordeal/article-1182169-detail/article.html>

Broadcast Mentions

There are no broadcast mentions to note.

Times Letters page and GMC published responses

A response to Neil Roberts' letter to The Daily Telegraph argues that 'it should open the floodgates to get retired doctors back on side...there are many administrative tasks GPs could drop to allow more time in this emergency.'

Other News

Guidance from NICE, which alerts doctors and nurses to signs that children could be suffering from abuse, is likely to result in more children being taken into care, according to the Daily Mail.

Theodore Dalrymple, writing for the Daily Express, notes that Hannah Jones, the 13 year old girl who refused a potentially life-saving heart transplant last year, has changed her mind.

Politics was a step down for Darzi

A comment on Ara Darzi's departure from the Department of Health last week. Is the Darzi message really embedded in the DNA? After 12 years of Labour, even doctors' leaders at the General Medical Council accept the need for greater openness as promoted by Darzi the establishment outsider (an Iraqi trained in Dublin, for heaven's sake), who insists that junior doctors should be encouraged to admit - and discuss - their mistakes.

Britain lacks health checks for travellers at airports and for hotel workers

SIR - Neil Roberts of the GMC (Letters, July 21) writes that doctors who have left the service for very good reasons may be called upon to rejoin the fray. When I consider how much work goes into reappraisal each year to keep the GMC sweet and allow me to practise, I think it naive that it should open the floodgates to get retired doctors back on side. It was fine in the war, when my father was given his licence to practise two years early, but this is not a war and there are many administrative tasks GPs could drop to allow more time in this emergency.

Excessive, dangerous workload for doctor

Jane Barton, the doctor at the centre of elderly patient deaths at Gosport War Memorial Hospital, had an 'excessive and dangerous workload', a panel heard. The family GP, whose conduct is being examined in relation to 12 deaths on her wards between 1995 and 1999, repeatedly raised concerns over her workload and had asked for more help, the General Medical Council heard yesterday.
